

MENTAL WELLNESS IN THE WORKPLACE

Build Resilience. Lead with Integration. Sustain Performance.

Full-Day Workshop · 7 Hours Active Training · For Middle Managers

In 2025, 84% of employees reported at least one mental health challenge at work. The problem is not that people are too fragile. The problem is that the systems, habits, and leadership behaviours around them are generating more pressure than the available recovery. This workshop addresses the root of that — practically, scientifically, and without the usual wellness theatre.

THE MANAGER AS CLIMATE VARIABLE

69% of employees say their manager has a greater impact on their mental health than their salary or company policy. There is no neutral position. You are either a protective factor or a risk factor.

FROM PRESSURE TO PERFORMANCE

Stress is not the enemy. Unmanaged stress is. The neuroscience of allostasis, integration, and body budgeting gives managers a clear and actionable model for leading under pressure.

SYSTEMS THAT HOLD

Wellness without systems is aspiration. This workshop builds the practical infrastructure: communication triage, boundary protocols, burnout early-warning signals, and realistic optimism as a leadership skill.

This is not a soft-skills day. The data behind this workshop should concern you the way a fire in your server room would — because the cost is just as real.

THE NUMBERS

Mental wellness is no longer a benefit. It is a financial and governance imperative.

- Burnout-related productivity losses cost global organisations approximately $322 billion annually
- For every $1 invested in evidence-based mental health support, organisations return an average of $4 in productivity and reduced claims
- 69% of employees say their manager has more impact on their mental health than their therapist, their salary, or company policy (APA, 2023)
- Toxic workplace behaviour is the single strongest predictor of burnout: employees in toxic cultures are 8x more likely to burn out

The cost of inaction is structural, not anecdotal.

- Only 10% of employees globally feel engaged at work (Gallup, 2025)
- 30% of employees experience silent burnout — still performing on the surface, privately approaching collapse
- Hybrid teams show 30% less burnout — but only when managers actively nurture connection and protect boundaries
- ISO 45003 now requires organisations to treat psychological harm as a workplace hazard, equivalent to physical risk

Not investing is not a neutral position. Your organisation pays the status quo tax every quarter.

THE PROGRAM

Six modules. Neuroscience, practical systems, and leadership tools. Every module includes structured exercises using participants' real team situations.

01	Wellness as Infrastructure	The status quo tax. Presenteeism vs. absence. ISO 45003. The manager as climate variable. The Professional Iceberg exercise.
02	The Biology of Pressure	Allostasis and body budgeting. The Hand Model. FACES flow. Integration vs. chaos and rigidity. The Lookout's Scan.
03	Your Inner Leadership Team	The Four Inner Negotiators (Dreamer, Thinker, Lover, Warrior). The Performance Gap. Scripting the Optimal Response.
04	Systems for Chaos	The Communication Deluge. Capture and Triage Protocol. The 25% Buffer Rule. The Positive No role play.
05	Leadership at 26,000 Feet	Burnout as an environmental product. The Silent Fade. Realistic optimism as a learnable skill. Recovery planning.
06	Synergy, Commitment & Action	MWe — from Me to We. Meaning stewardship. Three leadership commitments with accountability partners.

Format: Full-day, 7 hours. Theory, exercises, role play, reflection.

Materials: Full printed participant workbook included.

Audience: Middle managers. Adaptable for senior leaders.

WHO IS THIS FOR

Designed for middle managers in organisations where performance pressure is real and sustainable leadership is the goal.

- Managers responsible for team wellbeing and performance outcomes
- Team leaders in high-pressure, fast-changing, or hybrid environments
- HR and L&D professionals building resilient leadership culture
- Organisations facing high turnover, burnout signals, or engagement gaps
- Any manager who has watched a good person quietly fade and did not know what to do

WHAT YOU LEAVE WITH

Specific tools, grounded in neuroscience. Participants complete a Leadership Action Plan with three binding commitments before leaving.

- A neuroscience-based model for managing your own stress response under pressure
- The Four Inner Negotiators — a framework for integrating logic, empathy, vision, and execution
- A personal Capture and Triage system to end daily overwhelm
- The language to name and respond to silent burnout in your team
- Three specific, accountability-backed leadership commitments

THE APPROACH

This workshop operates from one premise: leadership behaviour is the primary environmental variable in team mental health. The goal is not to make managers feel better about themselves. It is to give them the science, the tools, and the honest mirror they need to become a protective factor for the people they lead.

“69% of employees say their manager has a greater impact on their mental health than their therapist or their salary.”

You are either a protective factor or a risk factor. There is no neutral position.

DANIEL STAMIN

Twenty-five years of business experience across oil and gas, pharma, FMCG, finance, and a dozen other industries. Management consultant, trainer, coach. Probably overqualified to help you, definitely invested in doing it well.

I spent 14 years training people in behavioral and leadership skills before I understood that the hardest skill is knowing when to stop pushing and start listening. That realization is more or less what made me a coach.

Over 1,000 hours of one-to-one and team coaching since 2015. I bring the structure of a consultant, the patience of a trainer, and the self-awareness of a recovering perfectionist who is still very much in recovery.
