STRESS & BURNOUT

Recognize it. Understand it. Move past it.

The WHO classifies burnout as an occupational phenomenon resulting from chronic workplace stress that has not been successfully managed. It is not weakness, and it is not a character flaw. It is a measurable condition with three distinct dimensions: exhaustion, cynicism, and reduced professional efficacy.

EXHAUSTION

Chronic physical and emotional depletion. Rest stops providing recovery. The body stays in a stress response even when the external pressure has lifted.

CYNICISM

Emotional distance from work, colleagues, and outcomes. What once mattered stops mattering. Engagement drops below the point where motivation alone brings it back.

INEFFICACY

A persistent sense that effort no longer produces results. Confidence erodes. Decisions become harder. High performers begin to doubt the skills that carried them.

High performers rarely collapse suddenly. They erode gradually — often unnoticed until performance, health, or the person themselves is gone.

THE NUMBERS

Burnout is not a personal failure. It is a widespread and well-documented workplace phenomenon with direct consequences on performance, health, and retention.

- 76% of employees experience burnout at some point
- 44% report daily stress at work (Gallup, 2023)
- Employees experiencing burnout are nearly 3x more likely to actively seek new employment
- Depression and anxiety account for over 12 billion lost workdays per year globally (WHO)
- 84% of millennials report high stress levels in their current role

For organizations, the cost is concrete.

- Increased absenteeism, presenteeism, and accelerating turnover
- Declining output quality and more frequent errors
- Higher healthcare costs and reduced team cohesion
- Loss of institutional knowledge when key people leave

The question is not whether burnout affects your organization. It is whether you address it before the cost becomes visible.

FOR INDIVIDUALS

A structured, confidential coaching program for professionals and managers in demanding roles. Designed for professionals who are still delivering results — but recognize the early signals of strain. The program follows a clear sequence: detection, reframing, recovery, and sustainability.

What you work on:

- The specific drivers behind your current stress load
- Where your boundaries erode, and why they keep eroding
- Patterns that keep you in survival mode
- Recovery as a deliberate, sustainable practice
- What you actually want, beyond the pressure

Outcome: clarity, boundaries, restored focus and decision-making capacity, sustainable performance.

Program: Program: 7 sessions, 50 minutes each. Each session follows a structured rhythm: review, focus, deep inquiry, and accountability. Session one establishes context and goals. The rest is built around you.

FOR TEAMS & ORGANIZATIONS

A structured team coaching program for leadership teams, management groups, or work units where stress has become a shared condition rather than an individual one.

What the team works on:

- Collective stress signals and team-level dynamics
- Communication patterns that break down under pressure
- Shared norms that drain or sustain the group
- Leadership behavior and its effect on team health
- Building resilience as a team-level capability

Outcome: improved psychological safety, reduced friction under pressure, more stable execution

Program: Minimum 4 sessions, 6 recommended. Sessions run 2 to 4 hours depending on team size. The program is co-created with the organization.

THE METHOD

Coaching is a structured, confidential process that helps you think more clearly under pressure, make better decisions, and act more deliberately. It does not diagnose, prescribe, or give answers. It builds your capacity to find them.

It is not therapy. It is not consulting. Therapy works with the past. Consulting brings external solutions. Coaching works with what you already know, what you are not yet seeing clearly, and what is getting in the way.

"The goal is not to recover enough to go back to what broke you."

The goal is to understand what happened and build something more sustainable, useful and healthy.

Every session is confidential. The process is ICF-aligned and built on psychological safety.

THE BUSINESS CASE FOR COACHING

Investing in coaching is not a welfare initiative. It is a performance decision with measurable returns. Organizations that invest in structured coaching and well-being initiatives report:

7x

studies report average returns of up to 7x the investment in coaching

23%

higher employee engagement in teams with active coaching support

39%

improvement in stress management among coached employees

22%

lower turnover rates among coached employees

70%

of coached employees show measurable improvement in work performance

30%

reduction in healthcare costs linked to well-being programs

DANIEL STAMIN

Twenty-five years of business experience across oil and gas, pharma, FMCG, finance, and a dozen other industries. Management consultant, trainer, coach. Probably overqualified to help you, definitely invested in doing it well.

I spent 14 years training people in behavioral and leadership skills before I understood that the hardest skill is knowing when to stop pushing and start listening. That realization is more or less what made me a coach.

Over 1,000 hours of one-to-one and team coaching since 2015. I bring the structure of a consultant, the patience of a trainer, and the self-awareness of a recovering perfectionist who is still very much in recovery.
