

CLIFTONSTRENGTHS COACHING

Name it. Claim it. Aim it.

Most people spend their careers fixing weaknesses. CliftonStrengths starts from a different premise: people succeed most, and contribute most, when they invest in what they are already naturally great at. This is not positive thinking. It is a 40-year research program by Gallup, built on interviews with over two million professionals, that identifies the specific talent patterns behind exceptional performance.

NAME IT

Understand your unique talent DNA. Your Top 5 CliftonStrengths themes explain how you think, feel, and behave at your natural best. Most people recognize themselves immediately.

CLAIM IT

Own your strengths as a leadership asset. Map your themes to the four domains of leadership: Executing, Influencing, Relationship Building, and Strategic Thinking.

AIM IT

Apply your strengths deliberately to your most pressing challenges. Performance improves when you stop trying to be someone else and start being a more intentional version of yourself.

Strengths overused or applied in the wrong context become liabilities. The difference between a strength and a derailer is often just awareness — and the right questions.

THE NUMBERS

The case for strengths-based development is not philosophical. It is measurable, replicated across industries, and backed by decades of Gallup research.

- People who use their strengths daily are 6x more engaged at work (Gallup)
- Strengths-based teams show 12.5% higher productivity on average
- Employees who receive strengths feedback show 14.9% lower turnover
- Teams that focus on strengths show 29% higher profit (Gallup Business Journal)
- Only 33% of employees strongly agree they get to do what they do best every day

For organizations, misaligned talent is a silent cost.

- Disengaged employees cost 18% of their annual salary in lost productivity
- Managers who focus on strengths reduce active disengagement by 45%
- Strengths-based cultures report 7.8% higher customer satisfaction scores
- Teams with high strengths awareness outperform peers on execution metrics

The question is not whether your people have strengths. It is whether those strengths are visible, named, and aimed at the right targets.

FOR INDIVIDUALS

A 7-session coaching program built around your unique CliftonStrengths profile. Designed for professionals and leaders who want to understand what makes them excellent — and use it deliberately.

The program follows a clear sequence: talent DNA, four domains of leadership, performance application, blind spots, partnerships, communication, and strengths-based culture.

What you work on:

- Your Top 5 themes: what they mean, where they shine, where they derail
- Your dominant leadership domain and how to leverage it
- Intentional application of strengths to real performance challenges
- Blind spots: strengths overused, misapplied, or working against you
- Building partnerships that cover your non-dominant areas

Program: 7 sessions, 50 min each. CliftonStrengths assessment required. Built around you.

FOR TEAMS & ORGANIZATIONS

A structured strengths program for leadership teams, intact work groups, or organizations building a strengths-based culture from the top down.

What the program addresses:

- Team strengths mapping: who brings what, and where the gaps are
- Turning differences in talent profiles into a team advantage
- Strengths-based communication across diverse leadership styles
- Engagement: connecting daily work to individual strengths
- Building a culture where strengths are visible and valued

Outcome: Higher engagement, stronger team execution, and a shared language for performance.

Program: Co-created with the organization. All participants complete the CliftonStrengths assessment.

THE METHOD

Coaching is a structured, confidential process that helps you think more clearly under pressure, make better decisions, and act more deliberately. It does not diagnose, prescribe, or give answers. It builds your capacity to find them.

It is not therapy. It is not consulting. Therapy works with the past. Consulting brings external solutions. Coaching works with what you already know, what you are not yet seeing clearly, and what is getting in the way.

“You cannot be anything you want to be. But you can be a lot more of who you already are.”

The goal is not to fix what is wrong. It is to understand what is strong — and aim it.

Every session is confidential. The process is ICF-aligned and built on psychological safety.

THE BUSINESS CASE FOR COACHING

Investing in coaching is not a welfare initiative. It is a performance decision with measurable returns. Organizations that invest in structured coaching and well-being initiatives report:

7x

studies report average returns of up to 7x the investment in coaching

23%

higher employee engagement in teams with active coaching support

39%

improvement in stress management among coached employees

22%

lower turnover rates among coached employees

70%

of coached employees show measurable improvement in work performance

30%

reduction in healthcare costs linked to well-being programs

DANIEL STAMIN

Twenty-five years of business experience across oil and gas, pharma, FMCG, finance, and a dozen other industries. Management consultant, trainer, coach. Probably overqualified to help you, definitely invested in doing it well.

I spent 14 years training people in behavioral and leadership skills before I understood that the hardest skill is knowing when to stop pushing and start listening. That realization is more or less what made me a coach.

Over 1,000 hours of one-to-one and team coaching since 2015. I bring the structure of a consultant, the patience of a trainer, and the self-awareness of a recovering perfectionist who is still very much in recovery.
